European Digital Rights' central objective is to promote, protect and uphold fundamental human rights and freedoms in the digital environment.

EDRi works towards achieving its overall objective by:

1. providing policy makers with expert civil society-focused analyses of basic and complex digital rights issues;

2. leveraging the power of national members to ensure that challenges are addressed effectively at the national and European level;

3. ensuring that European civil society voices are reflected in the global debate about the future of the internet, the information society and digital media; and

4. providing a platform for its members organizations to coordinate actions, amongst themselves and with the Brussels office.